

Evergreen Personals

Evergreen, Feb. 20. Mr. and Mrs. R. S. Hudnell, of Lynchburg, were recent visitors in the home of his uncle, W. W. Farrar.

W. W. Farrar and son, J. T. Farrar recently made a business trip into Charlotte county, and incidentally got some first hand information as to the condition of the roads traveled daily by the school buses and mail carriers.

For some time some of us have kidded ourselves into believing we would not have influenza, or any of the other communicable diseases going the rounds. However, I will mention a few of the sick:

Mrs. W. W. Woolridge, Wethers Paul to Mrs. J. M. Harvey, Wendell Paullette, Mrs. Wilcox, Paul C. who has been confined to her bed several weeks, and is improving.

W. W. Farrar is confined to his room at his writing, partly because of a heavy cold, but mainly because of the inclement weather.

Dinner guests of Mr. and Mrs. J. M. Harvey Sunday were Mr. and Mrs. Walker Jennings and son and Mr. and Mrs. Wiley Richardson and son, of Lynchburg.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Winner were recently informed of the illness of their son-in-law, J. T. Gilson of Washington.

Will Garrett and Ernest Farrar have sold their tobacco at remunerative prices.

On a recent trip on a N. and W. train, the writer observed near the place formerly known as Burton's Sliding, what appeared to be the effects of a recent tornado. For a short distance along the tracks many oak trees were uprooted.

I will add one name to Mr. R. C. Wagner's February 20th birthday list, A. B. Hunter, who lives near Ridge House.

Many of my readers have read my note line, 2-20-40. These figures can only be used once in a century. Few that are living today will have an opportunity to use them again!

Miss Shirley Harvey is sick with flu.

Mr. and Mrs. J. C. White and daughter, Peggy, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. J. O. Staples.

Mr. J. Martin has the flu.

Mrs. S. J. Jennings has the flu.

Charles Kurtz, who has been suffering for some time with lumbago is no better.

Friends and relatives here are glad to hear that Vernon Farrar, who has been ill in a Petersburg hospital, is some better.

Mrs. Edith Moore, who has been nursing her sister, Mrs. Randolph Evans, returned home Sunday.

Caded James Cheatham, from V. M. I., is expected home Washington for some time with lumbago.

Mrs. P. W. Coleman is up after a spell of sickness.

Fluorescent Lighting Has 'Daytime' Effect

Fluorescent lighting, already widely used in stores, art museums, theaters and restaurants, will open up a hitherto untouched field of decorative colored lighting in the home of tomorrow.

So prophesies a prominent United States lighting consultant. With fluorescent lighting augmenting, but not necessarily rivaling the present type of incandescent lamps, we may look for them to go hand in hand with each other in the homes of the future to achieve that soft warm daylight effect which best brings out the shades and tints of our home furnishings. Architects and builders already are beginning to appreciate the possibilities of fluorescent lighting in the home.

Because a daylight effect can be achieved easily with fluorescent lamps, they are especially effective for lighting bathroom mirrors, for powder rooms where makeup can be applied to look as if it will look in daylight, for lighting pictures and tapestries, artificial windows, cover niches and for unusual lighting effects in halls and living rooms. They also are proving acceptable for lighting work surfaces such as kitchen tables and desks.

Fluorescent light is achieved by transforming invisible ultra-violet rays into visible light by the use of various chemicals. The chemicals are sprayed on the inside of the tubular lamps and by the proper selection of chemicals, various colors are obtainable. The lamps are available in the following standard colors, daylight, white, gold, red, blue, pink and green. They are more efficient, producing white light, for example, while using one-third the electrical energy required for ordinary lamps. Fluorescent lamps are up to 50 times as efficient as the incandescent variety.

Fluorescent lamps have a longer rated life and the colors endure for the life of the bulb, but the cost of the entire installation is higher since much of the equipment has not yet entered the mass production stage and might still be classed as tailor-made. The lamp itself costs approximately 10 times as much as the incandescent type does now, and each bulb must have its own operating mechanism, which sells for about $1.50.

X-Rays of Old Paintings Help in Detecting Frauds

An exhibit of specialized X-ray films at Harvard university shows that several paintings, traditionally attributed to the Flemish master Rembrandt, may really have been the work of his pupil, Ferdinand Bol.

On one disputed picture, a portrait of "Saskia," the underpainting is weak and experts believe Bol may have done that part of the painting. Rembrandt finished it. The shadowgraphs show that Bol's underpainting was usually made of red and less distinctive than the master's.

Harvard has more than 3,200 X-ray studies of paintings and they are expected to help in detecting forgeries, determining authorship of pictures, and discovering whether they have been touched up.

One study reveals that the "Vision of a Monk" was painted about 1700, but that years later a second angel was added. An angel also was added to the Fifteenth Century picture, "Annunciation to Madonna of Her Approaching Death."

The X-rays also reveal how artists change their minds while painting—rearranging figures or changing the pattern of the work-in-progress.

Wallpaper's Varied Uses
Wallpaper's primary use is as a covering for the walls, but there are many other functions this material may serve. Manufacturers are promoting the use of wallpaper as a ceiling covering on the basis that it substitutes decorative interest for bare white "nothingness." Rooms gain in unity and effectiveness, they say, by the use of an appropriate ceiling paper blending into the walls. The interior of cupboards or drawers offers opportunity for effective wallpaper use. Modern paper designs form excellent backgrounds for china, as well as emphasizing the character and color scheme of the dining room and kitchen. Clothes closets are now being treated, either to carry on the wallpapered, the room or to contrast with it. Unfinished plaster closets appear bare and incongruous when closet doors are left open.

Historic Printing Press
Among the most interesting displays in the state house at Monterey, Mexico, is an historic printing press which several times saved the life of its owner, Samuel Langley, the first printer in north Mexico. An itinerant printer, Langley contracted in 1817 to print manifestos and handbills for the small group of Mexican patriots who were trying to continue the revolution against Spain. When the enemy forces captured him, he was the only man who could operate the press. He willingly went to work printing propaganda for the royal army and later was several times traded off with his press to other Mexican govt. officers. The machine was eventually taken to Monterey and is now carefully preserved.

Good Postal Twine Made from Cotton

Uncle Sam as postal clerk uses carloads of twine each year for tying bundles of sorted mail. He has been using twine twice—for economy and because the cotton twine available has not had the combination of qualities most desirable for a postal twine.

For tying bundles of letters twine should be strong enough to hold despite rough usage. It should not be so fine that it cuts the hands of the clerks when they tie the bundles and break the cord. The twine must not stretch enough to allow the bundles to loosen and the letters to scatter under rough handling.

The United States department of agriculture reports a new cotton twine developed that has proved satisfactory in preliminary tests in the actual handling of mail. Treatment of the twine with a sizing mixture containing a small amount of pine tar oil (to keep down mildew) and tannic acid, artificial windows, cover niches and for unusual lighting effects in halls and living rooms. They also are proving acceptable for lighting work surfaces such as kitchen tables and desks.

The new cotton twine runs about 1,350 yards to the pound, as compared with about 650 yards of the old twine. The new twine is slightly higher price for cotton twine would be offset by the increased yardage. In this work by the department had the co-operation of a large twine manufacturer.

The post office advertised for several carloads of the new cotton twine, but the twine manufacturer was booked so far ahead on orders that they could not make deliveries within the required time and could not, therefore, submit bids.

U. S. Families on Relief Buy 'Protective' Foods

What do families on relief actually buy with the blue stamps issued as a practical method for distributing food of which there is a surplus supply? What foods do they choose when they have opportunity to select as they please from a limited list of surplus foods?

It is too early to draw general conclusions, says Milo Perkins, in charge of the United States department of agriculture food-stamp program. But for a six-week period the stamp holders spent a little more than 80 per cent of their blue stamps for "protective" foods and a little less than 20 per cent for flour, corn meal, rice and beans. Butter, eggs, and fresh fruits and vegetables have protective value.

For this period the stamp plan was effective in five cities. There were four different types of stamps, each with a different design. The stamps were used to purchase a variety of basic plan seemed to work best. In general, orange-colored stamps, which were bought by the relief family, could be used to buy any foods, and half as much as blue stamps given free could be spent only for food on the official surplus list. At that time the surplus list included butter, eggs, oranges, grapefruit, peaches, pears, cabbage, peas, tomatoes, onions, dried beans, white flaked corn, flour, corn meal, rice, and dried beans. Nutritionists do not class the last five items as "protective" foods.

Blind Carpenter's Building
Robert L. Cleverly Sr. of Pittsburgh, Pa., is building a three-room addition to his house "by feel."

The carpenter for 40 years, who has been virtually blind for six years because he couldn't stand the glare of his own work, has built the main dwelling of four rooms in 1922. Cleverly's blindness does not appear to handicap him greatly. Already he has made excavations, laid foundations, set in the sills and the building has begun to take form. The blind carpenter uses a T-square or a strip of lumber to guide him while sawing lumber. And nailing nails is his biggest problem. He holds the nail until the hammer-head begins to pinch his thumb and forefinger, then lets go and sinks the nail with one or two more strokes.

Mississippi's Landmarks
Along the Natchez trace in Mississippi, one of the most historic thoroughfares in the East, are such picturesque landmarks as Rocky Springs church, a small log cabin, a tavern and Elizabeth Female college. This institution, the first women's college in America to confer degrees on women, was chartered in 1818. It is now a college of the Methodist Episcopal church, and is a member of the faculty. Both before and after Mississippi was a state in 1817 the Natchez trace and swamps by thousands of incoming settlers.

Miracle of Glass
"How far that little candle throws his beams!" Yes, were it not for glass we could see nothing. The glass of the 200-inch mirror being installed on Mount Palomar in southern California. And glass is a material that makes the distant world closer. In a microscope it makes the minute world larger. In a camera it makes the distant world permanent. In spectacles it makes the world clearer.

Recent Bride Entertained

Mrs. F. E. Cline and Miss Marcia Ann Childers were joint hostesses recently in entertaining in honor of Mrs. Jack K. Marshall, at the Cline home in Lynchburg. Before her marriage, Mrs. Marshall was Miss Louise Scroggs.

Decorations were in accord with Valentine's Day. The bride's cake was cut and served with punch. Games and contests were diversionary and a surprise shower was given the honoree.

Stories of Indian Wars

Substantial crops of old documents have been gleaned by the custodian of Fort Laramie National monument from filing boxes that have lain in the old store at that Wyoming army post since the days before its abandonment early in 1890. The papers cast interesting light upon the financial fortunes of the men garrisoned there during the Indian wars.

Applications for many orders include names of persons who later became well known citizens in Wyoming. One soldier signed his application "Happy Anderson" and another rates mention because he sent the largest order of all, for $150, to the post in the name of "J. H. Laramie" to be delivered to Company F, Seventh Infantry.

Subscriptions to various newspapers and magazines for various months were issued included leading names of the time. The post office also had a list of the long-established publishers of the day. Mail-order houses were popular. Some of them are still in existence today, as are also some of the big department stores in New York, Philadelphia and St. Louis that found patronage in far-flung Fort Laramie.

Testing Auto Drivers

Isaac Hart, 40 years old, of Trenton, N. J., who was granted his first automobile driver's license in 1919 and who has driven with "no one knowing and evidently not caring whether it was capable of driving or not," has offered to take a physical examination to determine his fitness in a letter to Arthur W. Magee, state motor vehicle commissioner. Hart said he hoped to "start a movement through which every driver of an automobile in the United States will be compelled to pass a periodic test proving his fitness to drive."

Hamburger, German Term

Hamburger is a German term. It came up from the name of the town of Hamburg (Germany) plus ending of toponymic adjectives. Hamburg was a free city and its name is the shortened form for hamburger (or hamburge) steak—fine ground or chopped beef.

The "Sunday School Lesson" published each week in this newspaper has been adopted by thousands of churches throughout the United States as a regular part of their weekly work.

It is a review and exposition of the international lesson for each week, prepared by Dean Harold L. Lundquist, of the Moody Bible Institute at Chicago, a recognized leader in the nation's church work. Dean Lundquist has been editing this teaching material for years, thereby acquiring an insight into the needs of those people for understandable explanations of Bible passages.

In view of his accomplishments in church work, it is not surprising that Dean Lundquist's exposition of the weekly Sunday School lesson is being used in almost every community of the nation. As a teacher or student you will find it extremely helpful.
